POR THE STAR.

Recited on the occasion of the Consecration of Glengood Cemetery, August 2d, 1854.

GLENWOOD BY IVENES These are Gods acres, henceforth consecrate To burial rites and slumbers of the dead, Where mourning bands the sepulture shall wait, And words of prayer and benison be said.

See, where the Lodge looks down the city street. And sculptured forms the sacred entrance keep, As though sad seraphs lingered there to greet

The dead borne onward in their dreamless sleep.

Lo, where the ground by art and nature made To knolls and dells, in undulation lies,
Where o'er the sunbeams into shadows fade,
As earth reflects the grandeur of the skies. There stands the mausoleum down the way,

The vaulted marble turning towards the west; Where trembling sunsets cast their parting ray Back on those portals of untroubled rest. Thence winding walks and pebbled pathways break By glebes of grass, fair slopes and leafy glades,

Where weeping pilgrims years to come, shall take Their weary courses through these haunted shades. Meanwhile the groves and purfled lawns between, Sip mingled beauties from the summer air :

Oak, cedar, cypress in perennial green, And the wan willow drooping silent there. Fit funeral emblems, pointing towards the sky, Through storm and darkness from this world of ill

Yet telling ever to each passer by That like themselves, fond memory liveth still. But crowning all, rise you old sentry trees,

Where fresh made mounds, alas! too soon may So, in their semblance, one might deem he sees The patriarch olives of Gethsemane.

Once in that garden, filled with midnight gloom, Christ in his anguish, bent the suppliant knee, Ere from the fragments of his rended tomb, The stars flashed forth, of immortality.

And here, as there, full many a heart shall break, While here, as there, grief spends her piteous

Yet o'er the Urn, the light of Hope may wake,

For Christ endured, and we in Him prevail. His blood has mingled with earth's meaner dust, His flesh reclaimed the furrows of the grave; Sown on seputchral fields, the see s of trust, Presaging what shall thence in glory wave. So, when the spade shall turn this platted sod. And germs of being fill the hallowed mold; Oh, think not then life's fruitage lost to God, Though pulseless forms he festering and cold.

What if like shadows, ages long shall fly, And scatter mildew through the planted loam ; Yet, when the autumn of the world draws nigh, Will reaping angels shout the harvest home. Such then be Glenwood, o'er whose charnel hall No rathless din of human strife may roll-

Where flowers shall spring, and pensive thoughts shall fall And Sabbath quiet soothe the fevered soul. Oh, templed refuge from long carking woes! Whose altar shrines, sweet blossoms shall per

Whose solemn aisles these wooded hills compose, Whose grander cope the holy stars illume.

Here shall thy congregations ceaseless kneel; Youth, strength and beauty, one vast throng com-

While for thy worship, day and night shall peal The deep, old anthem of the organ wind.

Here massive vaults and monumental frames. Here chiseled stone and graven cenotaph,

And tablets carved with old familiar names, Shall tell at last, how drops the way-worn staff-How homeless widow and pale orphan child.

How grey-haired man, proud son and maiden fair, Their journey ended o'er life's moor so wild, To nature's dark, returnless couch repair. Here then shall rise the city of the dead,

Here rest in hope the beautiful and brave, As rifled households one by one shall tread Like Israel, each his own Machpelan's cave. Here, oft in dappled morn or dewy eve,

Shall kindred dress the tear-bathed turfs above And o'er the sleepers scented garlands weave, The last dear tribute of our thwarted love. The last, save when, with low and stifled words.

The lover's moan, the mother's sobbing prayer, Shall tone the music of the tuneful birds With dirge-like echoes from the burdened air. Full swift the sombre hearse may hither teem The first fresh victim in his mortal swound:

Full soon, the mattock may be bid to seam The earth's warm breast, whereon they heap his

For in you famed metropolis, I ween, The death-shaft hurtles, where her thousands throng-And masses mustering in that mighty scene,

Shall hie them here, to slumber deep and long. Here, where from sheltering ledge and broken glen, Strange prophet-voices seem the soul to warn, As though strong cherubs litanied to men,

The coming world and resurrection morn. As dawns that day eternal on the sight, And cerements by trumpet-blasts are riven,

Then shall her dead come forth to life and light, And Glenwood prove the garner field of Heaven.
